Although the practice of cheese making has been carried on for centuries, all of our knowledge of the chemical changes involved in the ripening process and the various factors that bring about these changes has come to us within the past fifty years. The earliest record we have of any discussion of this subject from a chemical point of view was published only a century ago. In this paper the French chemist, Chaptal, discusses the ripening of Roquefort cheese and advances certain theories to account for the changes in appearance and flavor which this cheese undergoes during its sojourn in the natural ripening caves. Biological factors were, of course, not taken into account in Chaptal's paper, for that phase of the subject was unknown until the time of Pasteur. No scientific study of the subject, however, was made until the latter half of the nineteenth century. The attention of chemists was then directed to Roquefort cheese by a paper published by Blondeau in 1864. Blondeau analyzed cheeses in different stages of ripening and found that the fat content increased from 1.85 per cent in the fresh cheese to 32.31 per cent in the cheese two months old. This enormous increase in the fat he ascribed to a synthesis of fat from protein by the mold. But a comparison of his figures for the other constituents of the cheese as well as the fat with analyses to be found in any modern book...
