Not illustrated. 1877 Excerpt: .of our elementary text-books in physics, geometry, surveying, etc., could gain a little of the spirit of our best authors in chemistry, and rewrite their books in the light of the science of to-day. From John Haywood, Professor of Mathematics, Otterbein University. Having come into possession of a meter manufactured by the Stanley Rule and Level Company, an associate--Prof. McFadden--and myself concluded that we ought to bring the Metric System to the notice of our students, and give them some instruction in it. While studying over the project, I saw clearly that it would add very much to their interest if their business and traffic could be conducted in the new system. A grocer was easily persuaded to agree to sell coal-oil by the liter to students and others calling for it in this way, he being furnished with a liter for the purpose. The students eagerly patronized the new measure. The introduction of the metric weights was not so easy; yet something has been accomplished, and I have now in possession a grocer's scale with double beam, one metric, the other common, which I hope to put in one of our grocers stores, where it will do some good in much the same way as the liter. A move from which I look for good results is tabe the putting up of flour in our mill, in sacks of 10 kilograms, of 20 kilograms, and 25 kilograms, the weight being printed boldly upon the...
