Excerpt from Journal of the Canadian Bankers Association, Vol. 13: Containing October 1905 to July 1906 The recovery from the crisis of 1857-58 was slow and interrupted. The gradual improvement of 1859 received a considerable impetus from the bountiful harvest of 1860, which greatly stimulated trade, and would doubtless have induced, under the spur of eager competition, quite a speculative expansion had it not been followed by a couple of poor harvests in 1861 and 1862. The Situation was further complicated by the outbreak of the Civil War in the United States. On the whole, however, the trade of Canada was steadily expanding. The crippled condition of the Bank of Upper Canada, and the tying up of much of the capital of the Commercial Bank and others of the older banks, afforded greater opportunities than appeared on the surface for the expansion of the newer and untrammieled banks. Among these the most stable, enterprising, and best managed were the Ontario Bank and the Bank of Toronto, which were rapidly building up extensive and profit able businesses. The general situation encouraged an...
