Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .For the present problem we are concerned only with the x and z displacements, i.e. with the motion projected into the plane of Fig. 17. Integrating equation (14) and the first of equations (13) subject to the initial conditions above, and eliminating t , we get $Ha + (i50 (, s)$ where a , is the perpendicular distance between the planes, and xx is the vertical level at which an electron emitted at the level x_0 with velocity components $-u_0$ strikes the opposite plane. Considering electrons setting out with different values of $-u_0$, those for which u_0 exceeds the right-hand side of (15) will strike the plane at a level higher than x_u and those with smaller values of u_0 at a lower level than x_v It follows from this that if f is the width of the hot strip and that of the slit, both supposed to be of indefinite length, the current passing through the slit at the level xx is where N , is the total number of electrons emitted by the strip, and $F(w_0)dw_0$ and $\int (u_0)du_0$ are the proportions of them for which w_0 lies between w_0 and $Zf_0 + dw_0$, and $-u_0$ between $-u_0$ and $-u_0 + du_0$ respectively. If f and f are both small, as in the experiments, there are two important cases for which (16) reduces to a quite simple expression. First suppose that $VieA w-03$ is a large quantity. It is worth while remarking that if, as we have seen...
