THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, VOL. 111 (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 498 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.0in. Excerpt from The North American Review, Vol. 111: Sculpture gave life to the whole edifice and told its story through speaking forms, which kindled enthusiastic reverence in the worshipper as his eye wandered from the pediment to the metopes, followed the circling frieze, and at last rested upon the majestic figure of the titular deity within the cella, which looked, says a Greek poet, as if the god had come down to earth to reveal himself to the sculptor, that he might represent him as he is. Painting brought out the varied lines of the architecture, gave relief to the groups between the triglyphs, marked the folds of the draperies, and rendered every detail of ornament distinct and clear; while architecture, holding the decorative arts in its firm grasp, served as a framework to display their beauties to advantage, and borrowed from them a grace which enhanced their special perfections. The warrior's shield suspended to a column, the embroidered peplos, the great silver bowl made out of the trophies of the spoils of a battle field, and the painted vase placed within the sanctuary, though detached from the building, were yet a part of its organism as consecrated offerings, and contributed their quota to the general charm; for, in accordance with a high standard of perfection, they were all beautiful in form and in ornament. As the temple in antiquity, so the cathedral in the Middle Ages, taught the multitude to appreciate art through the many forms of beauty which were brought together for its embellishment. The altar was resplendent with utensils precious in material and beautiful in shape; the walls glowed with frescos; the pulpit and the font were storied with bas-reliefs;...
