Excerpt from Exploring the Position of Community Health Centers: Increasing Health Care Coverage and Access to Care for the Uninsured, Including Immigrants As the number of people without health insurance has grown dramatically across the us. In recent years, the number of newly uninsured in California grew by approximately each month in Not only are the numbers of uninsured climbing at incredible rates across the nation, but the systems in place to deliver health care to the uninsured are being threatened by a combination of changes in publicly funded health insurance programs, eligibility criteria and the sharp decrease in public health care dollars. Community health centers have, for the past four decades, worked to ensure linguistically, culturally and geographically accessible health care for the uninsured. This paper explores the current environment for community health center systems of care and innovations in the funding of this care to guarantee continued access to the growing number of under and uninsured in Alameda County, California.
