Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Let us consider the meanings of the word grace set forth in the introduction to this excellent work: The various meanings are indicated by St. Thomas (Ia lae, q. 110, a. 1), but it is fitting that we say something of them at the beginning so that the connection may be apparent between the present question and the questions relating to God's love for us. First, there are of course three acceptations of this word grace even used in human affairs. For grace originally refers to something which is not due or is freely bestowed; this meaning is very common in both profane and biblical writings. Hence even in purely human matters the term grace has a threefold application, as follows: 1. The love of benevolence conferring a gift which is not due; for example, we say: This soldier has the grace of the king. 2. The gift itself freely bestowed; thus we say: I grant you this grace. 3. Gratitude for a benefit received; thus: I render you thanks for your benefits. Moreover, these three significations may be transferred to the supernatural order, whereupon the word grace applies to the following. 1. The love of benevolence on the part of God, conferring supernatural life. This love of God is uncreated grace. 2. The supernatural gift of grace itself, freely bestowed and ordained to eternal life; this is created grace, of which we are now treating, whether it is interior or exterior, such as the preaching of the gospel. 3. Our gratitude to God. Between the human and the supernatural meanings of the word grace there lies a great difference which is principally based upon the fact that...
