Excerpt from Training for Librarianship: Library Work as a Career Just now, when conditions are right for rapid library extension in the United States, there is a shortage of librarians. A large city library recently reported more than two hundred vacancies on its staff. Other libraries, large and small, are suffering from similar conditions. Positions ranging in salary from $1500 to $8000 have been vacant for months because of the difficulty in finding the right person for each position. Directors of library schools are overwhelmed with requests for trained people to fill vacancies in all parts of the country.
