The book has been in print continuously since 1923. Richards sets forth a contextual theory of Signs: that Words and Things are connected through their occurrence together with things. Ayers Language, Truth and Logic, , and both the Richards-Ogden book and the Ayer book would, in turn, influence Alec King and Martin Ketley in the writing of their book The Control of Language, which appeared in 1939. This book would in turn influence C. S. Lewis in the writing of his defense of natural law and objective values, The Abolition of Man (1943).
