Excerpt: . escaped from prison, and the sailor escaped from prison, becomes, The soldier and the sailor escaped from prison. THE COMPLEX SENTENCE. A Complex Sentence consists of two or more simple Ex. 71. sentences, joined together by Conjunctions of the second kind; as, When the money, for which he had been waiting so long, went to another person, the wretched man relapsed into utter despondency. Note.--We may illustrate the difference between the Compound Sentence and the Complex Sentence by calling the former a chain, the latter a cluster of Clauses. The derivation of the two names will also help to indicate the difference. In the Compound Sentence the Clauses are merely put together (cum and pono), while in the Complex they are woven together (cum and plecto). A Sentence may be a combination of the Compound and the Complex; but, if even one Conjunction of...
