Grandmother, ask?d Ella, what had plain funerals to do with the Stamp Act? Why, said grandmother, it had become the fashion to have the funerals very grand and expensive. Mourning clothes and ornamented mourning cards were brought from England. And, as people were determined not to use any English goods, they cut down the funerals. Didn t anybody go to see anybody buried 5 asked Dora, with sympathy in her voiee. Oycs! said grandmother, everybody went. They had great processions, and, as there were but few carriage?, the larger part went on foot. The relations, however, rode on horseback. It is getting late, said Cousin Will, suddenly. I must go in order to catch the train. I am sorry we have not a leathern convcniency, laughed Louise, that we might send you to tho depot. Cousin Will commenced with grandmother, for he was one of...
