Since I wasn't good at sports, and with my father assigning me huge workloads to do around the house that would last for at least a couple of days, and then just in case I did finish the work, I was to wait around the house until he got home to assign more work, so when I had time I read. If I got the chance, I would read all day and most of the night. By age 15, I had read all the fairy tales ever written. I moved on from them to Greek and Nordic mythology which I loved. Even some Mideastern mythology. Then a scattering of books of all kinds on subjects by authors such as C. Doyle, Robert L. Stevenson, and more, including poetry. Then I became interested in books by Booker T. Washington, W.E.B. Dubois, Gunnar K. Myrdal ( An American Dilemma, which made a deep impression on me). Also Niccolo Machiavelli, who also impressed me, and Henri Tocqueville, the French statesman and traveler, writing of his...
