

Managing Baby Boomers Intellectual Capital

By Alex Maingi

GRIN Verlag GmbH. Paperback. Condition: New. 16 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 7.0in. x 0.0in. Seminar paper from the year 2011 in the subject Business economics - Business Management, Corporate Governance, grade: A, University of Canberra, language: English, abstract: The human resource in America is remarkably changing. Throughout most of the last century, businesses and organizations could depend on a steady flow of potential employees with the required skills as well as career expectations that were required by the organizations. Nonetheless, this is no longer guaranteed. Presently, the technology, demographics, culture as well as new sourcing processes are making top managers to re-think hard their strategy regarding their workforce. As Welsh, Gordon, and Williams (2008) clearly observes, organizations hoping to attain and maintain high performance have to take a broad approach to comprehend this change, assess the effect and formulate a mix of solutions to possible manage this aspect. This challenging aspect is partly because of demographics. The stable flow of employees has been out of order. The available statistics are alarming: Every one hour, six baby boomers are retiring; indeed, according to Smith (2007) over 75 million of these baby boomers will be retired by 2011. The retirement rate will now...
