Not illustrated. 1830 Excerpt: . of the field, and being, like the old gentleman, somewhat insensible to any of those softer allurements, which minds of gentler mould discover in the society of those by whom we are soothed, exalted, and refined. During the progress of these changes in the Ryland family, Maria Dorrington would sit and listen to the recapitulation, in hopes that some change might bring her Frederick back, or at least place him in such a situation that his want of wealth might no longer be objected against him. News had arrived of his having distinguished himself in action--his name was mentioned in the despatches. Why was he not the bearer of them? A thousand times did she read over the lines in which his personal bravery and intrepid conduct were described, and her eye lingered on the one loved name, which seemed to blaze in letters of fire amongst the list of gallant heroes who, as well as himself, had so performed their duty as to merit the honour of being particularised in the narrative of the day s fight. Except, however, a courteous remark on the part of Sir George Dorrington, that poor Fred. Ryland seemed to be doing very well in the army, Maria heard nothing of him; and her heart revolted at the pity of her obdurate parent, which was indeed no kin to love. At this juncture the lovely girl was doomed to severer trials; the sufferance of quiet sorrow and unmolested grief...
