Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Anaesthetics in Practice and Theory: A Text-Book for Practitioners and Students The art of giving anaesthetics is ancillary to that of surgery. The brilliant development of the latter in modern times has inevitably stimulated the progress of the former, on which at the same time it has partly depended. It has even happened that, in intra-thoracic surgery, an extension of the lesser has opened the way for fresh advance by the greater sister art. This book endeavours to put before the student and practitioner a comprehensive account of the best current opinion and practice of anaesthetics, as well as the results of the writers own experience. He hopes to succeed at least in helping those who are beginning to practise this branch of medicine and to interest those who have already gained experience. The attraction even of a practical occupation like anaesthetics is heightened both by a knowledge of its past and by speculation as to its future. Although neither of these may bear directly upon the actual giving of anaesthetics, I have ventured to indulge a little in both. As might be expected, the history of attempts to produce unconsciousness as an aid to surgery begins hundreds of years ago. Over all this early history I do not propose to linger. It is already to be found in several books, and will be but the same if repeated in another. Suffice it to say that although the most ancient writings, the Bible, the Talmud, the Odyssey of Homer, contain references to the use of drugs for alleviation of pain, the first known reference to such use in order to combat the pain of a...
