

Is Punishment Ethical? The Fallacy of Good and Evil

By Jeanine Joy

Thrive More, Now. Paperback. Condition: New. 104 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 8.0in. x 0.2in. Is there a false premise that is blinding us to the truth? Is the reason our jails and prisons are bursting at the seams because we have been blinded by a lie? Does this lie prevent us from seeing a truth that has been proven repeatedly by scientists who cannot connect the dots between their work and the problem with the current system because they, too, believe this lie? Research has repeatedly shown that sustained low emotional states precede criminal activity. Research has also shown that positive emotional states lead to increased kindness, corporate citizenship, better relationships, less racism, and better treatment of strangers. What if the solution to crime was within our grasp and all we have to do is take action? What if our biggest prison problem twenty years from now is what to do with all the empty facilities? In her revolutionary thesis, Minister Joy argues that this future is feasible and that it is our moral and ethical responsibility to use this information to prevent the suffering and the waste of lives that will surely occur if we don't act. She challenges us...
