Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1830 edition. Excerpt: . . . Nature in general, History, Geography, Science, and c. and c. of every thing, indeed, that the author deemed it necessary for himself to know, in order to produce his work as it actually exists. He is in thorough possession of the unembodied essence of all the subjects of knowledge just mentioned, though he is not made to stumble and start at their technical nomenclature. Nothing remains but to evolve the various elements, and they are then seen to assume the form and character of distinct sciences. But this is not all; from particular facts, and the particular reflections connected with them, the pupils mind is led on to analyse circumstances in the aggregate, --to generalize, --to trace the method pervading the whole, --to see the reason of that method, --and thus to enter into the very spirit of his author, and to understand every thing, to think upon every thing, as the author did while composing his work. These are the advantages which it is not said may be obtained, but which actually have been obtained, from the employment of the method of Jacotot. Let then calm consideration decide the question, whether it is better to commit to memory a portion of any author equivalent to the six books of Telemachus, that the benefits just mentioned may be gained, or whether the same results as easily follow from the pursuit of the methods generally employed. But Jacotots system effects much more than has been...
