Excerpt: .her book of directions, bought in conjunction with a home case of medicines; and whi e she is giving aconite or something similiar to reduce feverish symptoms, she also urges the patient to partake freely of toast, or at least of gruel, not for a moment realizing that starchy food is never well digested in febrile conditions because the secretion of saliva upon which the digestion of these foods so much depends is always more scanty in such cases. In certain nervous diseases the consumption of tea, coffee or other stimulating food may completely overbalance the desired effect of sedative medicines; and in many cases of intestinal inactivity are not more fluids and coarse foods as necessary, and perhaps better than the use of aloes or other purgatives which only give temporary relief and tend to render the pathological condition permanent? If one has...
