Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: .village, and the head-quarters of the Kaivolo or mountaineers of Ovalau, who long defied King Thackombau, murdered one of his envoys, and were the terror of the Levuka people. The place was now entirely in ruins, the inhabitants having been made prisoners, and their town burnt by Thackombau. There remain now, only the oblong mounds of earth on each of which formerly stood a house, and the ditch and bank of earth, with which the village was fortified. The place is used now as a convict station, and here a number of prisoners, mostly Kaivolos, or devil men, from the hill tribes of the large island Viti-levu, were undergoing their various terms of imprisonment. Eight Tongan soldiers and an old English drill-sergeant were sufficient to keep the convicts in subjection. The men were made to work at clearing the surrounding land, and planting sweet potatoes and yams; whilst they were at work, the Tongans mounted guard over them with loaded muskets, and though the opportunities in the thick bush seemed so great, they were said never to escape; they are very much afraid of the Tongans. I was shown amongst the convicts one of the Burns murderers, who was said to have been caught when dragging the body of a white woman by the hair through the bush, with a view to eating it. I put a few questions through an interpreter: the man protested that he had never eaten human flesh, and that he would...
