A T Kazerun we put up in a kiosk, or summer residence of one of the old princes, sadly in need of repair, close to a broken fountain, and situated in a beautiful garden of oranges and pomegranates. Here, under the shade of waving palms, and regaled with the perfume of jasmine and roses, we tried to recover from the fatigue of our previous wanderings. Towards evening we received a call from the telegraph inspector, an Armenian, and his wife, who very kindly urged us to come to their house and stay with them, saying that we should be more comfortable there and much...
