Eas r, for his peerless fair, each gallant knight, mid the throng d tourney, his bright banner rour d, And threw his glove, the challenge to the fight. And if to snatch it from the ground, appear d A jealous rival on his barbed steed, twas theirs with joy the fair one s smile to court, Tho naught, alas I but death was oft their meed For Beauty ?ed not from the savage sport. Tho scenes of blood no longer please the fair, Still they a youth of manly courage prize, Who, justly proud their ?owery chains to wear, Ne er at the first repulse despairing ?ies. Deign, then, Maria! With a gracious smile To hear the herald that restores thy glove And be it, in a contest void of guile, A peaceful challenge to thy envied love
