N38 2000 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44806705 Subject: Fish hatcheries -- United States. Excerpt: . . . B-284391 Leavenworth National Fish Hatchery Complex in Washington State has had difficulty meeting production objectives in part because it has not had funding to replace outdated and dilapidated rearing ponds and holding and handling facilities for adult fish. Similarly, at the Dale Hollow National Fish Hatchery in Tennessee, the lack of funds has prevented the modernization of the aerator building, an oxygen-enriching facility. This facility is needed to reduce the number of fish health problems, such as partial blindness and tumors. Hatcheries efforts to evaluate the effectiveness of their programs have also been affected by the decline in funds. The following are examples: The lack of funds has resulted in not tagging all juvenile fish for the Great Lakes lake trout restoration program, according to officials in the Northeast Region. These officials are concerned that unless a sufficient number of juvenile fish are tagged, restoration decisions will end up being based on incomplete information. At the Green Lake National Fish Hatchery in Maine, the manager said that funding shortages have permitted only minimal monitoring and evaluation of the Atlantic salmon recovery program. According to the manager, without adequate monitoring of the juvenile salmon released from the hatchery, the Service will be unable to determine why these salmon are not surviving. Hatchery officials in the Northwest Region also report that funding shortages have limited their monitoring of their Pacific salmon recovery efforts. Funding declines have also reduced hatcheries ability to perform needed maintenance and have resulted in the loss of fish and a general state of disrepair at some...
