Excerpt: . . . recovered his consciousness, he found himself supported in the arms of a man who wore the dress of the higher order of priests. A red cross was embroidered on his flowing white robe, and also on his breast; and a mantle wide enough to enfold his slender form, fell to his feet. His head was covered with the hood. His face betokened age, and snowy locks fell over his brow and checks; but an expression of goodness and benevolence animated his countenance. The tempter--is he gone was Walters first exclamation, when his recollection returned. He is--my son, replied the stranger in the Arabian language, with which, during the sojourn in the East, the young crusader had become familiar. Thy proceeded. holy cross, to which thy life is consecrated. Walter started up in surprise. Surely, he said, I have heard that voice in Palestine! Belike--my son, was the answer. I healed thy wounds at Ascalon, and am now here to save thee. I am called Joseph, the pilgrim prophet. My father! cried the youth, joyfully. It may be thou canst tell me how to succour him who gave me life. Trust in God, answered the monk--a. nd He shall bring it to pass. But come hence; knowst then no place where we may find shelter till mornin g I know not, returned Walter, , if Wulfshedge yet lives; and no place, besides his inn. . The house of Master Wulfshedge-was famous in London at that time....
