Haslam, in the Mansion House, Dublin, in Belfast, Cork, C* A lady, whom I hold in very high regard, has asked me to give you a short unvarnished address, from a masculine point of view, upon Women s Suffrage; but I find it exceedingly difficult to say one fresh word upon the subject. I suppose, however, I may begin with the assumption that we are living under a professedly free constitution, in a free country; and I shall instance a striking illustration of the kind of free constitution that we enjoy. We are possibly just now on the brink of a fiscal revolution, which, whatever its merits or demerits, will be potent, for good or for evil, in the households of considerably more than one-half of the women of the United Kingdom; nevertheless there is not one of those women who will be vouchsafed a voice, whether of acceptance or rejection, in the enactment of that measure, which in her judgment, must be fraught with either weal or woe to herself and her children.
