Excerpt from Ghost Stories: And Phantom Fancies The following book is, therefore, an attempt, not to revive an exploded superstition, but to rescue a creature of the human brain from most undeserved neglect. The writer, like the prince of Denmark, exclaims, Alas! Poor Ghost land at this present Christmas time, and at other times too, when, drawing round the fire, we delight stories of the superhuman and the marvellous, seeks, by a. Simple and a kindly fiction, to beguile the time, to exercise the imagination, and, it is hoped, to leave the heart not unimproved.
