Reviews

This book is definitely not easy to get going on reading through but extremely exciting to see. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. I am pleased to explain how here is the finest book i actually have read inside my individual daily life and may be he best book for ever.

Historian Stephen Michael Catchpole. Paperback. Condition: New. 100 pages. Dimensions: 8.9in. x 5.9in. x 0.4in. This diary is a historical document of a journey I took with Barry Wood 40 years ago. It contains the exact record that was kept by me when I was 17 years old. In 1972 we left Britain and went on a Road Trip through Europe that lasted seven months. The actual diary is supplemented with footnotes and letters along with some comments from friends from that time. I do not remember my motivation for writing it. Memory and time are strange partners. Time while contributing to the other by creating new memories as it passes, also erases some of the existing ones in the process. One of the reasons history is so interesting is that it makes you question why people write some things at certain times. The written records of certain events have always helped us to understand them. These notes will hopefully give you a snapshot of that time and illustrate the zeitgeist that motivated young people to go On the Road. It is strange how the memories of some of the people whose paths you cross during your life's journey stay with you while others fade. That was the inspiration for me to put this together as a historical document and not as a personal statement. One should remember this happened to a whole generation. What started as a counter culture slowly became incorporated into mainstream life. Many of the things we take for granted today evolved from young people wanting something different back then. The personal freedoms we have today concerning the self-determination about how we want to live our lives owes a lot to the sixties and early seventies. Hopefully this diary will in some way give you some...
