Excerpt from Historical Notes on Quebec and Its Environment Originally a brewery owned by Intendant Talon, and sold to the French King in 1686, for 15,000 ecus. Later on, the Intendant's Palace in magnificence rivalled the Chateau St. Louis. J. K. Boswell's new and extensive Malt House was built in 1886, on its still solid foundations. For the city cows, styled by the early French La Vaquerie. In a trice we reach Dorchester bridge, the second one, built there in 1822 - the first, opened with great pomp by His Excellency Lord Dorchester in 1789, having been constructed a few acres to the west, and called after him. The bridge, as a means of crossing from one shore to the other, is an undoubted improvement on the scow used up to 1789.
