Excerpt: . . . has been the inhaling of irritating dust. The chicks are put into a burlap-covered box and airslaked lime dusted into the box. This starts coughing and sometimes the worms are coughed out. The dust irritates the tubes and lungs and may do more harm than good. Gapes and Earth Worms. The study of gapes leads me to believe that the common earth worm plays a part in the trouble. Given a case of gapes and the soil, as well as the earth worm, becomes infected. The chicks seek the worms, eat them, and in turn become the host of the gape worm. Many poultrymen write me that they feed earth worms to their chicks and never have gapes. So do I, and I have never had a case of gapes on my place. Let me buy a few chicks with gapes, give them the run of my yards, and I could then feed worms at great risk. You must have both the gape worm and the earth worm in order to get this disease into your plant. Soil infested with gapes should be abandoned for two years, and cultivated to growing crops. New ground should be used for growing chicks and the old yards well fenced against the chicks. Better give up the keeping of chicks for two years rather than lose two-thirds of your chicks by gapes. Possibly the holding over the laying stock two seasons--hatching no chicks--would clear up the danger from...
