Excerpt: . . . 11 and naturalization services should nevertheless remain within the Department of Justice and the State Department. Services such as naturalization, green card processing, refugee and asylum processing, and employment-based visas need to be an in agency better able to foster a professional service mission and attract employees who have the skills and temperament suited for providing services to families, individuals, and businesses. While service and enforcement functions of the INS clearly have areas of overlap, scrutiny of exclusion grounds does not have to be sacrificed in the development of a separate visa and naturalization service entity. Given cutting-edge technology that has been avail-able for years from Silicon Valley-type companies but never imple-mented at the INS, issues of data storage, confidentiality, high-vol-ume traffic, interagency communication, access, and security are quite possible. In conclusion, lets be clear. As currently proposed, the homeland security initiative goes too far. By subsuming many functions from over 20 agencies that have little to do with national security, we have to wonder. Service functions in the current INS are already marginalized by a pervasive enforcement culture, and it is a pipe dream to think that if INS is moved in its entirety to the Home-land Security Department, a reorganization plan can fully protect service functions. As an advisor to then-INS Commissioner Meissner, I witnessed constant frustration over attempts to professionalize many posi-tions in the agency through better training, only to be derailed by a culture in the field that reinforced the...
