The thoughts they were thinking we also would think, From the death they were shrinking we also would shrink; To the life they were clinging we also would cling, But it speeds for us all like a bird on the wing. Yes, I have often admired those beautiful lines, replied my wife; and from the way you tell your story, I believe you have been courting the heavenly muse yourself and have learned to tune the golden lyre. You no doubt have been sitting at the feet of Orpheus, and have learned to ride on the wings of Pegasus. Indeed you flatter me, he responded; I can claim nothing either by birth, genius, or education to warrant the assertion or merit the praise. But I am happy to say that I am and always have been...
