Eloquent Books. Paperback. Condition: New. Douglas Morris (illustrator). 36 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 8.3in. x 0.2in.Its morning rush hour! In the never-ending, crazy rush to get kids off to school, a parent often overlooks the most important thing . . . their child! Parents put great emphasis on what their kids are wearing and if theyre groomed properly. All done in a mad rush, while trying to play beat the clock so everyone can arrive where they need to be on time. Its at a moment like this that a childs wisdom needs to be heard and listened to on a daily basis. We need to stop and look at the world through a childs perspective. Parents work hard teaching their children, but there are also things we can learn from them! More is not always better, and simplicity has a lasting effect. From a childs point of view: Please dont look at my clothes all wrinkled and such, my shoes are on wrong, but that doesnt matter so much. Please dont say my jeans have a rip in the knee, it really doesnt matter. Here I am . . . Look at Me! Deborah K. Morris lives in Dorsey, Illinois, with her husband, Kevin, daughter, Sarah, and son, Douglas, who is the illustrator for this book. The author taught preschool for 12 years, which helped her gain more insight into childparent relationships. It is her hope that hearts will be touched, minds will be opened and relationships built, as the family grows in love and understanding of each other.
