Lorraine Williams sat at the same desk in the detective division of the San Francisco Police Department for fifteen years, solving many different types of crimes. She had finally reached the point in her life of where she wanted something more. It had been a big decision to quit the force and go into private practice. Lorraine had made the decision to become a private detective, working on the cases that would come to her from unprivileged families. She had spent many months preparing for the change by going around to the group homes for the homeless and under privileged. She had opened a small office in the community and had given notice to the San Francisco Police Department. She now starts her new life. Lorraine knew being a private eye would be very difficult, because most people felt that only men should be in the business. Of course it helped being five foot- six inches tall, with dark brown hair and blue eyes, plus having a body built like a wrestler didnt hurt. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
