Rainmaker Books, United Kingdom, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Does the search for meaning in work matter? - and is it even possible to ask such a question against a backdrop of mass youth unemployment, widespread poverty and growing inequality? Drawing on the experience of the Mondragon co-operatives in Spain and other innovative models of employment and enterprise from around the world - and the visions and values derived from his faith - Chris Beales explores how work might be humanised and education and employment made not only responsive to what the Economy needs but also purposeful, satisfying and rewarding for people. Chris Beales is, in equal part, activist, campaigner and theologian. He is also a classic example of what Antonio Gramsci famously described as the organic intellectual : his work is important, and should be read by policymakers, practitioners and others concerned with promoting social justice. From the Foreword by Prof Robin Simmons, Professor of Education, University of Huddersfield.
