Excerpt from Monthly Founded by Bret Harte in 1868, Vol. 86 The truth of that well known adage, Wilful waste makes woeful want, has been conclusively demonstrated in the destruction of the American forests. In our haste to progress socially, commercially and industrially we have in the most wanton waste the world has ever known destroyed five-sixths of the Nations virgin forests with little or no thought of perpetuating what God hath wrought for the benefit of humanity. A kindly providence has lavishly provided for this country; hut docs that give us the right to waste these blessings, destined for the human race for all future ages like spendthrifts Shall we adopt the most detestable motto of a modern Sardanapalus - anticipate everything, and leave nothing for those who will come after us Will Americas pride bear the humiliating prospect of having the immense world of culture, which so far has been achieved in this country by the most intelligent, independent, progressive and energetic of all nations, frustrated by the unavoidable consequences of our greedy mismanagement and profligate waste of the most vitally important of all our natural resources Shall the...
