Excerpt from The Edinburgh Practice of Physic, Surgery, and Midwifery, Vol. 3 of 5: Preceded by an Abstract of the Theory of Medicine, and the Nosology of Dr. Cullen; Surgery To those who would be well versed in the principles of Surgery, it cannot be a disagreeable talk, to trace the origin and progress of it from the earliest accounts down to the present period; especially as the first necessary step in the pursuit of any Science, is to become acquainted with all that has already been made known upon the subject. We therefore commence this part of our undertaking with a general sketch of the History of Surgery, and propose to point out, in a cursory manner, the principal persons who have adorned that noble art with their practice and writings. The most ancient division of medicine was into Chirurgery Diet, and Pharmacy: the former of these teaches us to cure by the assistance of our hands and by various external applications many disorders to which the human frame is incident, and which, are not within the power of the other two branches. In the primary ages of mankind, when the most perfect of all created beings had yet scarce degenerated from that state of perfection in which he was must produced from the hands of the Creator, disease was yet unknown upon the earth. Man had then no wants but such as the neighbouring dream or the labour of his own hands would supply, no cares but those of a domestic nature amply compensated by the satisfaction which attends them. His mind was not yet weakened by intemperance nor his body impaired by debauchery - exercise was his only physic, and...
