Excerpt from A Field With the Eleventh Army Corps at Chancellorsville: A Paper Read Before the Ohio Commandery of the Loyal Legion of the United States, October 7, 1895 The bonfires and torches, ablaze on the right bank of the river, now revealed a scene of weird and overpowering grandeur. The storm-riven mill, clinging to a rugged elevation to the west, and anked by the black piers and charred ribs of the dismantled bridge, rising in columnar desolation - all the more desolate in the streaky glare - seemed in unequal conflict with the swollen, rock-tossed river in front, which, eddying and seething in whirlpool currents, and multiplying the glare of the beacons into innumerable coruscations, on the crests of their rolling and wallowing rage, dashed into the roaring night below. Everything combined to harass the advance! To essay the now heaving and writhing ford were fated madness! The stoutest pontoons would sway and crunch like cockle-shells amidst the wrestling whirlpools! No infantry would dare the frenzied stream! The artillery must lead the van! But, before, under the sharp commands of the pilot scouts. On the farther shore. The tortuous thread of the buried ford had been tentatively assured, one caisson was swept into the black and horrible gulf beyond.
