Excerpt: .the sea, it was considered best to land in front of the houses of the Macuas,1 for there the water was smoothest, and all could land with least trouble. When this agreement had been arrived at, the Marshal declared he suspected, among so many captains and young men whom the fleet contained, there might be some one who imagined he would acquire honour in being the first to set foot on land before he himself should do so, but he would swear to such an one, were he a captain or any one in his fleet, he would order his head to be struck off, but if such an one should be of the people of India and the CaptainGeneral would not give a similar order, he would never speak to him again; and he said he would desire them earnestly not to disembark on the land before he himself should, but allow the boats to reach all together at the same time. And, because all his captains were not present there, he wrote to each one of them his written instructions with regard to the plan of action that had been determined; that they were not to plunder the city, nor set fire to it without his permission. And on the following day, which was the fourth of the month of January, all went into the boats, and proceeded together to strike the land. But, because the current was running very strongly, Afonso...
