(5) Mental hygiene: Prevention and early detection with a view of correcting emotional instability or potential neuropathies. Mental testing with a view of determining the pupil s aptitudes may well come within this group of health promotion interests. b. In preventing disease, facilities must be provided for: (1) Detecting early the communicable diseases through physical examinations and a keen appreciation of the significance of coughs, colds, temperatures, nose and throat examinations, rashes and other subjective and objective symptoms in recognizing and controlling communicable diseases. Further, the detection of the earlier and more salient features of such chronic diseases as tuberculosis must be made by means of recognition of the early symptoms, weight and temperature charts, etc. (2) Provisions for the early isolation and treatment of communicable disease cases, not only for their own welfare, but for the prevention of the spread of communicable diseases to others. Openair schools or sanitarium treatment for the pretuberculous and tuberculous. (3) Again, provisions must be made for the care and treatment of ill school children whether the illness is of a communicable nature or not. In the grades this is generally done at the homes. The facilities essential for carrying out efficiently the personal phases of a school health service must include examination rooms, dispensary, and, in many instances, rooms containing beds--hospital. Of course, in the prevention and treatment of communicable disease, the very closest cooperation with the homes, with the city s or...
