Excerpt: .Lucy immediately thought how much her grandmother would like it; and, anxious to present the beautiful fruit to her, she stretched out her hand to pluck it; but below the peach her little Vol. v. E spend the day with her grandmother. There was a beautiful large garden round which the fingers came upon something soft and moving; she looked at it, threw the peach away, and, with a great cry, she fled as fast as her legs could carry her. This soft moving thing was--a caterpillar. John, the old gardener, who was only a few yards off, nailing up some untidy branches, hastened towards the Uttie girl, and anxiously inquired what had happened. But Lucy, who was still trembling with fear, could only answer by pointing with her finger to the peach lying on the ground, to which the caterpillar still clung. What! exclaimed old John. Is it this poor little caterpillar which has made you cry like that? How can such an innocent little beast make you so frightened, my child? Oh, it is so ugly! replied Lucy, with a face of disgust. Not at all, said the gardener; on the contrary, there are some of them very pretty. See now, added he, leading the child gently towards the peach, and taking both the fruit and the insect into his hand, -- see, my child, how beautifully this caterpillar is dressed. One would think it was clothed in brown velvet, with golden-coloured ribbons,...
