JonBenet was reported missing Dec. 26, 1996, in a frantic 5: 52 a. m. 911 call in which Patsy Ramsey told Boulder police shed found a ransom note demanding the head-scratching figure of 118, 000 for her daughters safe return. Instead of paying a ransom and getting their daughter returned, JonBents lifeless body was discovered early that afternoon in a little-used room of the familys cellar by her father and a family friend. JonBenet was discovered with tape across her mouth, a ligature buried deep in the skin of her neck through use of a garrote fashioned from cord and a broken paintbrush taken from her mothers art supplies. Some of the same cord was loosely bound around her right wrist. Not noticed until the autopsy was that shed also suffered a linear fracture to the right side of her skull, likely the result of a single blow from a blunt object. And some believe that she was sexually abused. So many interpretations have been advanced over time of the forensic evidence in this case, made only worst by a highly contaminated crime scene. It quickly came to resemble a criminalists darkest nightmare, each piece of the puzzle easily lending itself to the perspective of the person reviewing it. We will look beyond the facts of the crime as they became known in the days immediately following the discovery of her murder, we will also examine the behavior of JonBents parents, viewed as unusual by police and by the public at large. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
