C., April 26-May 2, 1906 Western North Carolina is famous throughout our great country for scenery wild enough to be enchanting, yet subdued into a serene beauty that brings balm and peace to the human spirit. To those who know the Carolina mountains, every mood of the year is welcome, for each makes delightful revelations of the changeful beauty that haunts the peaks and valleys and streams. But the first blush of the year s new life seems, indeed, a breaking forth of God s glory in the Land of the Sky. The balmiest spring weather not only greeted the happy comers to Asheville for the eighth Annual Meeting of the Board, but it lingered throughout the entire week, with only brief showers now and then to make one know that April was not forgetting her time for making the world to blossom. It was too late to find the trailing arbutus - that shy, sweet recluse of the rocks - and too early for the laurel and the rhododendron, but mountain sides and valleys were bright with violets and phlox and dogwood and the gorgeous wild azaleas. A great bunch of galax leaves, sent in one day to the body with the compliments of the Toxaway Company, brought visions of mountain streams and hiding places of beauty; and among the handsome palms in the church, purple lilacs and Easter lilies mingled their richness and purity. Had no flowers been in evidence, they would scarcely have been missed, for Central Church in itself...
