In the last years of his lite he was, as a printer, unswerving in his advocacy of ad--qllato compensation for labor performed. Endowed by Providence with a quick and vigorous intellect, it was often his province to advise others as to the road to honor and material pros pcrity, and his advice was always cheerfully given. I llow difficult it is to pay a just tribute to the memory of the dead. Their faults, if any, should exist no more in memory, and their good deeds alone be remembered and spoken of. The comrade, whose moldering earthly tenement lieslbeneath the trodden sod, may often, as in this case, be dcsul il1g of the highest tribute of respect and appreciation, and yet he whose duty it is to speak of his good ((l dS must often...
