The book is now in a second printing. Otherwise, new and unread. By the time she reached her late twenties, Eudora Welty (1909-2001) was launching a distinguished literary career. She was also becoming a capable gardener under the tutelage of her mother, Chestina Welty, who designed their modest garden in Jackson, Mississippi. From the beginning, Eudora wove images of southern flora and gardens into her writing, yet few outside her personal circle knew that the images were drawn directly from her passionate connection and abiding knowledge of her own garden. One Writer's Garden: Eudora Welty's Home Place (University Press of Mississippi) by Susan Haltom and Jane Roy Brown is an exploration of the garden Welty tended with her mother and how that work affected her writing. Near the end of her life, Welty still resided in her parents' house, but the garden fell into neglect when Welty no longer had the strength to care for it. Co-writer and garden designer Susan Haltom offered to help preserve the garden and spent ten years restoring the green space. Welty began remembering the flowers that had grown in what she called "my mother's garden." Before her death Welty herself would look on from the breakfast room window as Haltom began uncovering hidden bulbs and nursing the writer's beloved camellias and her mother's roses. At the end of those long days, Haltom would often re-read Welty's stories, discovering anew symbolism and imagery drawn from the very soil she was digging in. When Welty's private papers were...
