Excerpt: .method of characterization, fixed as the law of decorum, flourished throughout the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. In England from Whetstone on it was 0 made much of. Thus a rhetorical tradition of classical pedagogy, derived ultimately from Aristotle, and a poetical tradition of later classical drama, derived from Horace, coincide in the English renaissance. In The Epistle Dedicatory to the Shepherds Calender (1579), for instance, E. K. praises Spenser for his dewe observing of decorum everye where, in personages, in seasons, in matter, in speach. 18 The archaisms are defended in the first place, indeed, because they are appropriate to rustic speakers, but in the second because Cicero says that ancient words make the style seem grave and reverend. Further praise E. K. grants the author because he avoids loose sentence structure and affects the oratorical period. Now, for the knitting of sentences, whych...
