Excerpt from On the Management of Patients With Typhoid Fever: A Paper Read Before the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, May 17, 1898 The title of this brief communication expresses the principal idea it is intended to enforce. In no other disease is it more important to bear in mind that the true function of the physician is not to attempt to interfere with the normal evolution of recovery, or the processes by which this is brought about, but rather to guide his patient safely through them. Within recent years two series of experiences have impressed upon the profession in America (one from the negative, the other from the positive side) the needed lesson that temperature in itself is not to be feared, and as a symptom is not to be directly combated, save under extreme circumstances. The unfortunate results of treatment by the coal-tar products have practically demonstrated the danger of mere antipyretic dosing; while on the other hand the excellent results obtained by the use of cold water, after the method of Brand and in other ways, have shown that the febrile process expressed by high temperature may readily and safely be controlled within certain limits, to the great increase of the patient's comfort, and with improvement of his chances of recovery.
