Yet truly thou art cursed in having such a jaw, The champ of which doth try my patience sore. And soon thou hast to scud from angry scratch and claw, And often thou must bite afresh ere surfeited thy maw! Hadst thou instead of escharotic teeth Been furnished with a blood-extracting bill, Which once insinuated skin beneath, The worst were past; I d feel no thrill To make me shiver as though an agueichill Did all my joints and nerves undo, Till I sit chattering like a fanning mill, Perhaps when sitting in the still church pew, Where I should think of heaven instead of things like you. I grant there s naught on earth, nor in the sea, Nor in the windy waste around our rolling sphere, That can at all compare with thy agility When thou art taken with a sense of fear.-And what was ever formed that can come near Thy well-knit bones P Thy strange infrangibility Is too well known to need long mention here, For who but oft has seen thee spring away quite free, Although between the fingers rolled most spitefully. FIGHTING IT OUT ON THAT LINE. WHILE crossing Telegraph Hill this evening in the vicinity of the beach, I witnessed an incident which has kept me smiling to myself for the last-Itwo hours. A couple of carters met in a street at a place which needed repairing. One cart was heavily...
