Molly Patterson is a beautiful young woman, a writer of romance novels. But, although she writes about great loves and passions for her characters, her real life makes her question herself as a woman--and whether she can find success and love with a good man. But she finds one, found in the depth of her own despair one day on the shore of Lake Superior. Eric Longbow is a young, handsome man who exemplifies virility to the extreme. But he is also a man who is principled when it comes to women. He wants more, much more, than simply a sexual relationship. He wants the love of a good woman--and that being for permanency. Their chance meeting on the shore ignites hope, then passion, in them both, reaching a very satisfying conclusion, a test of love which they both pass with flying colors.
