Referring to a supposed difference between the case of one engaged in a stock speculation and the case of an absolute owner of stock wrongfully sold by the pledgee, it was said in the opinion: But in both cases the qualification attaches that the loss shall only be such as a proper degree of prudence on the part of the complainant would not have averted, and a proper degree of prudence on the part of the complainant consists in repurchasing the stock after notice of its sale, and within a reasonable time. If the stock then sells for less than the defendant sold it for, of course the complainant has not been injured, for the difference in the two prices inures to his benefit. If it sells for more, that difference the defendant should pay. (p. 247.) In the opinion it is also...
