Excerpt: . . . of certain pupils--matters that can only be decided by experienced teachers. You would certainly be very unwise to try to practice them all. As you begin to acquire experience as a teacher it will be well for you to gradually make yourself familiar with the various etudes and their characteristics, and you will thus be able to draw upon them to fit the peculiarities of pupils whose gifts and needs may differ. You will find answers to that portion of your question that concerns the First Steps in recent numbers of The Etude. The College of Musicians was a branch of the Music Teachers National Association, and was a laudable effort to establish a standard of musicianship. Credentials issued by its board of examiners were a sufficient voucher for the musicianship of any teacher who may have passed the ordeal. I have not heard anything about it for several years and think it has passed out of existence. THE INFLUENCE OF THE READING OF MUSIC ON THE EYE. BY PROF. PR. BEST. (Translated and arranged expressly for The Etude by F. S. L. ) A Noted German oculist, who is often consulted by musically gifted young persons affected by weakness of sight or defect of vision as to the advisability of adopting music as a profession, says that the eyes are like all other bodily organs--so long as they are in a thoroughly healthy condition they are capable of an enormous amount of work....
