Many people believe that what we see is all there is; that evolution explains the universe in which we live; that when we die, that s the end. Others insist we are not the product of random chance, but rather the intentional creation of an all-powerful God. Which perspective is true? They cannot both be right. Is there any chance that having faith in something we cannot see explains the things we can? This short book suggests a logical progression of thought from Atheism to Christianity. Becoming a Christian does not require intellectual suicide. You do not have to check your brain at the door when you walk into a church building. Four Steps from Jesus doesn t answer every question about science and faith, but it does start a conversation that could very well impact the rest of your life.
